

YE EDITOR TAKES

AUTO TRIP

Last Friday, Ye Editor, accompanied by his wife and aunt Mrs. G. L. Waltman, made a motor trip to near Wallis, Texas. Leaving here going to Brenham we found the roads fairly good with the exception of places where before had been had mud holes but now dry and awful rough. Leaving Brenham for Bellville we found the roads in places good, only every now and then a rough place would be found as well as some sand. Reaching Bellville starting out to go to Sealy we were told we could not follow the Santa Fe railway the main road and nearest road between Bellville and Sealy, on account of Mill Creek bottom being in such bad condition after the heavy rains the Commissioners had fenced up the bottom and were at work on the road, said to be flooring the bottom which at times of rainy weather had been almost impassible. We had to detour eastward some several miles out of the way and take what was known as the lower road to cross Mill Creek. This way we also found some rough riding through the bottom but being dry we got along very well going very slowly. After getting out of the bottom we found the roads in fairly good shape from there in to Sealy. From Sealy south, seven miles, to El Pleasanton, the roads had been all graded some time before and we were in pretty good condition. At El Pleasanton we passed thru a gate into a pasture and then drove one mile and reached the house where by brother, Lee Bishop and wife are living. They have been out on the ranch some two years or more and getting along very nicely.
